

CBS 2 News Report on EPMF

CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	It is called the Electro Physiological Feedback Xrroid system or EPMF and right now thousands of practioners around the country like this woman, Kathryn Krosta in New Jersey say it can detect, even treat diseases-serious diseases.
Kathryn Krosta	Everything from cancer to bee stings ... immune system imbalance-systemic electrical oscillation disorder ...
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	We went to see for ourselves. Our visit was $300 cash and we took along a hidden camera. Here's how Krosta says it works
Kathryn Krosta:	What we are going to do is we are going to bombard you with 8 or 9 thousand difference frequencies ...
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	Those frequencies are delivered through contacts she hooked up to our producer's ankles, wrists and forehead. Krosta explained that the EPMF reads the body's energy fields, then finds what she claims are predispositions to all sorts of medical conditions
CBS Producer:	Are you able to diagnose?
Kathryn Krosta	That's the ticket
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	The EPMF doesn't have studies to back up its claims. Is not FDA approved. Even worse, it is banned, here in the U.S. and it's inventor, William Nelson, is a wanted felon in hiding overseas.
Unidentified Man:	You have people who have not got treatment for their diagnosed cancer because they have went off and used these machines. . . .
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	And that has lawmakers calling for an investigation into EPMF manufacturers and operators.
Unidentified Man:	There is really no more loathsome thing to do than to take advantage of somebody who is in pain and fear. . . .
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	The EPMF is just one of several similar machines authorities say are smuggled into the U.S. Others included the SCIO and the Pap Emmy (?), which have burned some patients.
Kathryn Krosta:	So let's give you a treatment, shall we?
CBS 2 News eporter Kirstin Cole:	Krosta tells our producer that the EPMF is running interference on a number of her potential health problems. We confronted Krosta back on the street. How does it make you feel knowing that you are using a machine that the FDA ...

Kathryn Krosta:	I don't give a ____ about the FDA.
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	She insisted she did not know about the ban and that she has cured breast cancer and other ailments using the EPFX where medical doctors have failed. You can get your training from DVDs and manuals and yet come up with better results? How does that work?
Kathryn Krosta:	Well because we are not from the cut, slash and burn school of medicine. Where you cut them, you poison them or you radiate them.
CBS 2 News Reporter Kirstin Cole:	Thousands of these machines are still being manufactured and despite that ban by the FDA, you can easily find them for sale on line. And as far as enforcement, the FDA never returned our calls. I am Kirstin Cole, CBS 2 News.
